

Invest in international companies whose products are used every day

Many of the top brands sold in the United States are owned by international companies that are well positioned to meet the growing needs of global consumers. As a U.S. consumer, you may be contributing to the bottom lines of these firms every day. Allocating a portion of your portfolio to international stocks can help you broaden your diversification and tap global opportunities.

Many brand names that have become part of our daily routines are owned by international companies that you can invest in

² John Hancock Disciplined Value International Fund is the successor to Robeco Investment Management International Equity Fund (predecessor fund) and was first offered on 9/29/14. Returns prior to this date are those of the predecessor fund's institutional class shares, launched on 12/30/11, and may be higher than if adjusted to reflect the expenses of any other share classes. ³ Represents the effect of a contractual fee waiver and/or expense reimbursement through 7/31/23 for John Hancock Disciplined Value International Fund and John Hancock Global Shareholder Yield Fund, 7/31/24 for John Hancock Fundamental Global Franchise Fund, and is subject to change.

The past performance shown here reflects reinvested distributions and the beneficial effect of any expense reductions, and does not guarantee future results. Returns for periods shorter than one year are cumulative, and results for other share classes will vary. Shares will fluctuate in value and, when redeemed, may be worth more or less than their original cost. Current performance may be lower or higher than the performance cited, and can be found at jhinvestments.com or by calling 800-225-5291.

Foreign investing, especially in emerging markets, has additional risks, such as currency and market volatility and political and social instability, and illiquid securities may be difficult to sell at a price approximating their value. Value stocks may decline in price. Hedging and other strategic transactions may increase volatility and result in losses if not successful. Large company stocks could fall out of favor, and illiquid securities may be difficult to sell at a price approximating their value. The stock prices of small and midsize companies can change more frequently and dramatically than those of large companies. A portfolio that focuses its investments in one or more sectors may fluctuate more than a portfolio that is invested more evenly across sectors. The value of a company's equity securities is subject to change in its financial condition and overall market and economic conditions. Please see the funds' prospectuses for additional risks.
