Management’s Discussion of Fund Performance

SUMMARY OF RESULTS

Global Environmental Opportunities Fund (Class I/JABVX) returned 7.27% for the year ended October 31, 2025. Global equities delivered strong gains, particularly in the U.S., supported by easing inflation, robust technology sector earnings and renewed optimism around artificial intelligence (AI). Growth stocks, especially in information technology, significantly outperformed value stocks.

On the macroeconomic front, inflation trended downward, and global growth remained steady, though uncertainty persisted around political events, government budgets, and trade agreements, particularly U.S.-China trade negotiations, which saw progress late in the period.

TOP PERFORMANCE CONTRIBUTORS

Energy Efficiency | The fund’s holdings in this segment were driven by a rebound in the semiconductor sector following the de-escalation of U.S.-China tariff tensions and a strong outlook for memory capital expenditures to support AI growth. Within Industrial Efficiency, ASML Holding NV, Siemens AG, Tokyo Electron, Ltd. and Taiwan Semiconductor Manufacturing Company, Ltd. led the way. In Building Efficiency, robust demand trends drove strong performance from Legrand SA and Trane Technologies PLC.

Renewable Energy | Electrical grid companies Terna - Rete Elettrica Nazionale and Quanta Services, Inc. benefited from a favorable outlook for utility-scale solar demand and electrical grid investments. Additionally, Hitachi, Ltd., our most recent portfolio addition, contributed positively.

Dematerialized Economy | This segment, representing the software portion of the portfolio, benefited from easing U.S.-China trade tensions. Positive contributions came from Cadence Design Systems, Inc. in electronic design automation (EDA) and U.S. software names like PTC, Inc. and Autodesk, Inc.

TOP PERFORMANCE DETRACTORS

Sustainable Agriculture & Forestry | This segment was the only detractor, impacted by softer U.S. consumer demand. Individual detractors included Symrise AG, Givaudan SA, and DSM-Firmenich AG, all fragrance and flavor suppliers to the cosmetics, food and related industries.

Weakness in specific holdings | EDA software firm Synopsys, Inc. experienced its sharpest single-day share price decline following third-quarter 2025 results that missed expectations and caused the company to lower its full-year guidance due to weakness in its design intellectual property segment. Carrier Global Corp., a provider of heating, ventilation and air conditioning (HVAC) products, declined due to a severe and persistent downturn in the residential HVAC market in North America and Europe which caused the company to reduce financial guidance several times.
